Aljex Software unveils new website

Oct 28, 2010 12:45 PM

A new website that loads quicker, is easier to navigate, and allows for “unguided” application tours has been unveiled by Aljex Software. The site, www.aljex.com \(http://www.aljex.com\), offers information on products as well as demonstrations without having to provide contact information.

“Visitors can try Aljex for themselves without anyone looking over their shoulder or asking for information. No one will call or email later on,” said Tom Heine, Aljex CEO. “They just click on the ‘demo site’ tab, select the application they want to try, and up it comes. They can explore, try scenarios, and click all the buttons they care to.”

Visitors can also have a traditional guided demo, Heine said, if they have questions they may want answered.

“We felt it was the right time for a website makeover,” Heine said. “We’ve been growing rapidly, even during the recession. We needed to bring Aljex Vision into the onscreen mix and we wanted our look to reflect the prestigious companies who are choosing Aljex.”

The company recently released its Vision software, which offers map-based dispatch, interactive web services for customers and carriers, EDI, e-billing, document imaging, auto load-board posting, agent security, and integration with fax, email, text, mileage software, and truck GPS.
